

National Assistance Dog Week

National Assistance Dog week celebrates the many different types of disability service dogs! Service dogs are carefully bred and trained to perform a task for their handler. This task could be letting the handler know that their blood sugar is high or low, that they may be about to have a seizure, helping visually impaired people get around, and many other things!

There are certain breeds that are more naturally suited for service work than others. Read about the breeds below and then color the pictures!

German Shepards are easily trained, loyal, obedient, and protective.

Golden retrievers are even tempered, motivated to work, and bred to hold and retrieve objects.
